

• The `millis()` function in Arduino programming is used to return the number of milliseconds that have passed since the Arduino board began running the current program.

Purpose of milliseconds:-

- It is generally used in timing representation.
- to show even timing event specific intervals.
- to represent the `delay()`.
- And also it enables the creation of non-blocking delay. It allows other code run continuously.

